DIFFERENCES

Best before date: the date up to which the manufacturer guarantees his product will retain all claims (e.g. freshness) after which the product remains marketable.

Sell-by-date: the last date the merchant can offer it for sale to the consumer but there is still a reasonable storage period in the home.

Use-by-date (expiration date): the last date by which a consumer may consider a product safe for consumption. It is the recommended last date of consumption.
